Degree Proposal: Master of Studies in Law

The proposal to offer an M.S.L. degree at Washburn Law School reflects changes in the legal marketplace and a growing recognition that individuals engaged in professional work in a wide range of subject areas may benefit from formal exposure to the study of law. A growing number of law schools around the nation have recognized this degree, and interested students would come from a wide range of parallel professions including accounting, business, children and family services, criminal justice, environmental studies, government, healthcare, human resources, journalism, library services, oil and gas, real estate development, and tribal officials.

Goal

The goal of the program is to provide a legal background that will complement the professional interests of the participants, strengthen their ability to interact effectively with the legal community, and provide professional certification of these accomplishments.

Rationale

Washburn Law currently provides a professional curriculum in all of the subject areas addressed in this proposal. Adding a limited number of students with parallel professional interests will enhance those courses by offering a diverse perspective to the law students while simultaneously providing a valuable educational experience to the students seeking a master’s level degree. Because of the small size of the Washburn student body, it is often difficult to expand the curriculum in a manner that meets the needs of current students while maintaining adequate enrollment within each class needed to generate effective instruction. The addition of a small number of M.S.L. students will enhance the efficiency and efficacy of the curriculum.

The curriculum pathway selected for each student will also build upon the particular strengths of Washburn Law, with the Centers and certificate programs of the school providing a framework for selection of courses. For example, masters level students who plan careers related to children and family services will be able to choose electives within a broad range of courses developed in support of the Child and Family Law Center. Similarly, students with a tax or business focus will benefit from the range of courses recognized within the Business and Transactional Law Center, those with criminal justice interests may be particularly inclined to enroll in courses found within the criminal segment of the Center for Excellence in Advocacy, and those with interests in politics, journalism or government services would find a range of courses enhanced by the Government Law Center. The current oil and gas industry employs a growing number of individuals who, although not needing a law degree, would benefit from a legal background focused on those issues, and the new Washburn Center for the Study of Oil and Gas would provide a course and resource base for those students.

Market

The market for students who may be interested in a master’s level law-related degree has changed dramatically in recent years. Larger numbers of prospective students have decided that they lack the interest and resources needed for a full three year study of law, and their professional interests do not require admission to the bar. By offering the program for either full or part time students, it would be possible to reach individuals making career changes as well as those wanting to advance their existing professional positions. The proposed M.S.L. degree would meet this demand while also allowing the law school to make relative adjustments to the size of its existing J.D. program.

Educational Impact

The M.S.L. program would enhance the educational opportunities of existing students while also maintaining the economic viability of the school. Admission of a limited number of M.S.L. students would be matched by comparable reductions in the size of the J.D. program. This strategy would allow the school to maintain or increase the standards for admission of J.D. students while also allowing the school to maintain a wide range of viable courses and adding diverse perspective to the students enrolled in those courses. J.D. students would gain insight into the interests and concerns of people in parallel professions with whom they will be likely to interact as lawyers. The total size of the M.S.L. program would be limited so that combined enrollment of J.D. and masters level students would not exceed historical levels of J.D. enrollment, and the low student/faculty ratio at Washburn would be maintained.

Fiscal Impact

Because the total size of the student body would not change from historical levels, there would not be a significant fiscal impact. Costs per credit hour would be the same for J.D. and M.S.L. students.

Courses

Each student would begin study for the M.S.L. degree by enrolling in an introductory course designed especially for these students. In all other courses, M.S.L. students would participate along with J.D. students and would be subject to the same academic standards. They would be expected to enroll in one or more foundation level courses suited to their individualized career path, and to choose elective courses for the balance of their degree.

Foundation courses would include:

- Introduction to Law, Legal Analysis, Legal Research, and Legal Writing (3 hours)
- Contracts I and II (5 hours)
- Criminal Law (3 hours)
- Property (3 hours)
- Constitutional Law I (3 hours)
- Family Law (3 hours)
Elective courses designed to complement the career paths of the M.S.L. students could then be selected within identified career paths as illustrated in the lists that follow.
