

adelphia and sold for the passage they had more than earned - one into New England, one in the Philadelphia area, one to a Virginian. The last was our forbear. He fell into good hands, was educated, became a judge, went hunting in North Carolina where he met a red haired girl and stayed.

Joseph Pennell, the etcher, was a descendent of the Philadelphia member of the trio. I have been told several times that I am very like the Mains Pennells.

When I was a child, I recall vaguely, the British crown tried to find a descendent
